THE BEHRING SEA CORRESPONDENCE

The diplomatic correspondence between Secretary Blaine and the representatives of the British Government, upon the subject of the Beiring Sea fisheries, has been made public, and constitutes a very interesting chapter in our history. The Secretary, in behalf of the American Government, appears to have maintained from the outset a position which may thus be succinctly stated: Beiring Sea is a closed sea; it was so held by Russia undisputedly from the date of its discovery until a portion of it was sold to the United States. England alone, and not recently, has denied to the United States the soundness of this claim; it is marine territory that we purchased from Russia; whatever title Russia had we bought; her title was the same as that by which she now exercises exclusive jurisdiction over the Russian half of the sea; the preservation of the seal fisheries cannot be accomplished if there is indiscriminate taking of seal, and already the unlawful taking has decreased the seal families materially and threatens the early extinction of the fisheries. But the United States all along has been, and still is disposed to arrange a settlement with England that will be honorable to both nations and preserve the fisheries, without abandoning the claim of the United States to the right to control absolutely the taking of seal in these waters.

While it is true that Canada and the Imperial Government did protest to the United States against the seizure of vessels fishing in those waters in violation of the laws of the United States, the latter has not conceded at any time, as England now claims, that pending negotiations and diplomatic correspondence such seizures should be discontinued. On the contrary, it is the part of England, according to Mr. Blaine's view, to cease making inroads upon the sealing fields pending the negotiations, and not for the United States to suspend the operation of her laws and permit the destruction of the seals to go indefinitely until the negotiations are concluded. The Secretary adds, with a vigor and application of a parallel that is very inspiring, that Great Britain herself maintains an exclusive claim to the Ceylon pearl fisheries that has never been disputed, and that, too, though the fisheries are far without the three-mile-from-the-shore limit, for which Great Britain now contends in our northern waters. England has not only for a century held these pearl fisheries, but has exercised the right to sell leases upon them, and to legislate concerning the marine territory, as if it were land upon her own island.

The response of Great Britain to these claims appears to be a denial of the claim that the Beiring waters constitute a closed sea. That they are not so encompassed by land as to come within the definition of a closed sea as laid down in the code of international law. That pending these negotiations the Government of the United States did agree there should be no more seizure of British vessels in Beiring Sea. That the seizures made were accomplished far outside the lawful maritime jurisdiction of the United States, that is to say, outside the three-mile limit. That the Government of the United States and of Great Britain ought to agree upon a closed season for the fisheries, navigation and fishing of the ships and crews of all nations.

The United States replied to this that the taking of seals in violation of its laws was never condoned, and that, in fact, the taking by other than authorized parties is contrary to good morals and the policy of international law. Nevertheless, the President is anxious for a speedy settlement of the matter, and solicits from the representative of Great Britain counter proposals.

England replied to this that such seizures as it complained of could only be made by virtue of international agreement in times of peace, because the seizures were made upon the high seas. This was simply a restatement of the case of Great Britain and renewed denial of our title to the marine territory ceded to us by Russia. It is true, that as the English Minister insisted even in the case of the suppression of the slave trade, seizure of the vessels of another nation is justified only by international agreement; but the instance is not in point, because in the pursuit of slaves the question of marine territory and closed seas has never entered in. The Minister also cited the case of the protest of the United States in 1821, presented to Russia against her act warning our ships, as well as others, to keep off the shores of Beiring Straits for 100 miles and up to 50 miles, and again he protested to Mr. Blaine against the continued seizure of English fishing vessels.

To this the Secretary replied that the United States protested in turn against the action of the British Government in giving aid and encouragement to the illicit fishers. At this point the correspondence appears to have become very sharp and to be flushed with considerable feeling. Mr. Blaine conveyed to the Minister the surprise of the President that her Majesty's Government, after admitting the necessity for a close season for the preservation of the seal fisheries should enter the protest referred to, and the refusal to enter into any convention for the settlement of the dispute until Canada had been heard from, since the latter objected to any restriction suggested. Such an excuse the President compares, says Mr. Blaine, to such a thing as a refusal by the United States to enter into convention with England for the settlement of some dispute until California should acquiesce.

The Secretary then proposed that England forbid British ships entering the sea for sealing until the two nations can arrange for the final settlement of the issue by convention. This suggestion was made for a single season only, but the British Minister replied that his Government had no legal power to enforce such restriction upon English vessels. This response cannot be looked upon in any other way than that it is unworthy the Minister. That it was an insincere reply, and evasive as well, admits of no sort of question, and Mr. Blaine makes it evident that the President so regarded it, for he replied that the proposition in a slightly different form came originally from Lord Salisbury himself, who had at the time declared the illicit fishing to be "wanton destruction of valuable property."

This brings the correspondence down to the 4th of June of this year, when the

THE HIGH SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT EVENT LAST NIGHT.

Grammar and Other School Exercises—The Programmes that Were Carried Out.

The Metropolitan Theater was crowded to its utmost capacity last night by friends of the free schools, to witness the commencement exercises of the Sacramento High School.

On the stage were President Chapman and Directors Sherburne, Payne, Davis, Ehrman and Taft, Principal Pond and Instructor Dahl, Mrs. Purcell, Miss De Laguna and Miss Allin, Superintendent Albert Hart, Hon. Elwood Bruner, Mrs. Addie Carter and the graduating class, as follows: Hattie B. Moore, Jennie B. Miller, Benjamin Parker, Clara B. Root, Blanche Ryan, Flora R. Vivian, Annie Aitken, Jessie T. Anderson, Levine E. Barrett, Amy Nettie J. Cantrell, Thomas M. Diviny, Ruth Spillman, Myra D. Shields, Anna E. Johnson, Elmira F. French, Samuel E. Poole, Josie F. Dickey, Downing, Cora Eldred, Ethel M. Gillis, Flora Hartwell, Edith Joseph, George B. Loyd. The school was handsomely draped and many were made handily by the girls, tropical plants, arbors of green foliage and distant views beyond, graceful drapery and a wealth of floral pieces made it a beautiful scene.

The students with drapery were mounted busts of Apollo and Mars, tributed to the stage-dressing by the Music Association, and over the proscenium lining an immense plaque of flowers with the words "The class motto woven in gold." The motto was "superb wreath, and another a large one in pure white flowers.

Behind the barriers of floral pieces and beneath the great floral plaque sat the graduating class.
